

Lesson 3	Resource 3V	Homework – Short Listening (page 1)
----------	-------------	-------------------------------------

1. According to the lecturer, what will be covered at the beginning of the course?
 - ☐ emotions
 - ☐ parts of the brain
 - ☐ knowledge
 - ☐ memory

2. Students will be able to access the course syllabus by _____.
 - ☐ participating in class discussions
 - ☐ scheduling an appointment with the professor
 - ☐ purchasing a copy from the professor
 - ☐ completing their registration for the course

3. Based on the lecture, what will students do in the course?
 - ☐ critique a peer's psychology study
 - ☐ conduct a basic overview
 - ☐ contribute to a psychology journal
 - ☐ learn to evaluate preliminary studies

TRANSCRIPT

LECTURER: Good morning, and welcome to Psychology 121! This course is a general survey of the study of psychology. I'm your instructor, Chris Crawley, and over the coming semester, we'll look at common areas of exploration in psychology, such as the different parts of the brain and what they do, and the perception of things like colour and sound. We'll look at memory and how good, or flawed, it really is. We'll also explore some basics about how we know what we know, and what limitations there are to that knowledge. But we're going to start off by discussing emotions such as love and happiness. We'll explore how emotions are influenced by internal and external forces, and how emotions influence us.

I'll be grading you on your participation in class discussions, as well as a handful of small papers and a final exam. Since this is an introductory course, I don't expect you to be an expert in the field by the time it's over! But by the end of the semester, you should have a good grasp of today's prominent psychologists and their contributions to the field. And here's a hint for the exam: You should be able to evaluate and critique famous studies as well as construct your own preliminary studies.

STUDENT: Professor, how can we find out what we're doing for each class? Is there a schedule we can look at?

LECTURER: If you have registered for the course, you will have access to the course syllabus, so you know what we'll be talking about each week, including today. I recognize not everyone has registered, however, so for those who haven't registered or haven't had a chance to look at the syllabus online, I have printed copies for you here. Feel free to pick up a copy up after class. The class is almost full with (I think) 59 people, but I will be able to take a few more. Come see me after class if that pertains to you.